Steve Troxler
Commissioner

I am proud of the services provided by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, and I am especially proud to know the work we do on a day-to-day basis helps residents across the state.

I know when I first took office I was not aware of all the programs and rules that fell under the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' jurisdiction, but I certainly have a better understanding of that now.

Periodically, I'd like to share with you what services different divisions provide and how those services help consumers. Most importantly, I want you to know how to contact us if you wish to report a problem.

One of our more highly visible divisions is the Standards Division, which helps ensure fairness in trade by assuring the accuracy of weighing and measuring devices. Basically that means when you buy a gallon of something or half a pound of something, then you are going to get that amount of product. Or if a price is advertised at $1.99, you will pay $1.99 when you get to the register. Those are two examples of the work the division does.

Inspectors check gas pumps, price scanners, scales used in commerce, grain moisture meters, weights on certain commercial products, weighing and measuring devices used in manufacturing, LP gas installations and motor oil quality.

In fact in 2006, our inspectors found jet fuel that had accidentally been delivered to a store's kerosene tank,

NCDA&CS seeking small farmstead dairy for pasteurizer loan program

Selected dairy can borrow pasteurizer for a year

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Agribusiness Development Section is looking for a small dairy in North Carolina interested in starting or expanding its farmstead operation.

Farmstead dairies process milk produced on their farm into value-added products such as cheese. The milk may come from goats or cattle. NCDA&CS received grant money from the N.C. Agricultural Advancement Consortium and U.S. Department of Agriculture to purchase a small-batch pasteurizer that will be available to the most qualified applicant for one year at no charge.

"We have encouraged farmers to look at value-added opportunities to improve their bottom lines, and this program helps farmers with a good business plan get started without having to initially invest in a pasteurizer," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "We have been able to help four dairies become established agribusinesses since starting this loan program."

Currently, there are 14 farmstead dairy operations across the state.

Applications to participate in the project are due by Feb. 16, and project administrators hope to identify a participant by

Feb. 28. The dairy will be selected on a competitive basis using the following criteria:

- Business readiness of the applicant;
- Experience in the dairy industry;
- Viability of the business plan;
- Knowledge of value-added dairy production;
- Suitability of available pasteurizer to the planned production;
- Personal investment of time and money in the value-added venture.

The selected recipient must agree to allow officials from the NCDA&CS to review the business' books to track the profitability of the operation using the supplied equipment. The farmstead receiving the equipment must also post a $1,500 refundable deposit against the value of the pasteurizer, and must agree to abide by all laws and regulations pertaining to production and marketing of the value-added dairy products.

"Our Food and Drug Protection Division will help monitor the program and work with the recipient through the process," Troxler said.

Complete rules and information are available from Ron Fish, assistant director of marketing, NCDA&CS, 1020 Mail Service Center, Raleigh, NC 27699. He may also be reached at (919) 733-7887, ext. 219, or ron.fish@ncmail.net.

AgroTips

Count wheat tillers to determine nitrogen needs.

Count the number of tillers, usually in late January or early February when wheat begins to green up (Feekes growth stage 3). If there are 50 or more tillers (with at least three leaves) per square foot, wait and apply nitrogen in March at Feekes growth stage 5. If your wheat is pale green and the tiller count is below 50, go ahead and apply half the recommended nitrogen. You should apply the other half after taking tissue samples in March. Sample results will indicate how much more nitrogen to apply.

Test source water for tobacco seedling float beds.

Nearly half of the source water samples taken from tobacco float-bed operations in North Carolina and about one in five nutrient solution samples have high alkalinity (sometimes known as total carbonates). Alkalinity values greater than or equal to 100 contribute to high pH and soluble-salt problems. When necessary, the solution analysis report provides recommendations for reducing alkalinity by 80 percent.

which could have had potentially devastating consequences had it not been found. Fortunately, we were able to stop the sale of that product before it reached consumers.

As you can imagine, this is a busy division, with inspectors stationed across the state.

It is important that we check these items so, as consumers, you get what you are paying for, and businesses can be sure their equipment is working properly. Think about the bathroom scales at home and how easily these get out of adjustment, and you'll understand why we need inspectors making the rounds at businesses to ensure fairness.

In 2006, nearly 50 stores were cited for excessive price-scanner errors, up considerably from previous years. But we see our work as also providing a service to businesses.

In today's competitive economy, consumers may decide not to shop in a store that routinely has scanner errors. Our inspectors also report errors that are in favor of the customer to store management as well, although they do not count against the company's overall rating.

While we check scales used in commerce, it is important to note that we do not inspect certain scales, such as those used in the produce section to let you know a general weight for grapes or peppers. We do inspect the ones used to weigh produce at cash registers and in the meat and seafood sections where a dollar value is determined.

Once a scale has passed inspection, we place a N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services sticker on the scale. These are typically visible when you shop.

Similar stickers are placed on gas pumps once they have been inspected. At the pumps we are checking to be sure shoppers get a gallon of gas for a gallon paid. Fuel is also checked to ensure its quality, octane rating and other characteristics.

For grain growers and dealers, our Grain Moisture Section inspects moisture meters at grain buying stations to ensure accuracy and fairness. Moisture meters are one of the primary tools of the trade in buying and selling corn, soybeans and wheat. Buyers adjust payment to farmers based on the moisture content of grains. For example, high-moisture corn won't earn the same amount of money as corn falling in the normal moisture range, so it is important the moisture meters be calibrated correctly.

Aside from these normal inspections, staff members also annually check pine bark and mulch, fertilizer and scales associated with several different commodities. These inspections are done seasonally.

For example, beginning in February we'll be inspecting pine bark and mulch, followed by fertilizer in March. In April, strawberry and produce scales are inspected, while cotton scales are checked in September and October.

This does not cover everything our Standards Division does, but it covers a broad range of services this division provides.

Our Standards Division does respond to consumer calls. You may contact the division at (919) 733-3313 Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.
